Course Description
This course studies the factors that influence the language a person uses, such as gender, age, ethnicity, social class, level of education, and emotion. Perhaps most importantly, it examines how these qualities can change over time and how these changes affect the dialect of a person. The course identifies the following: codes and styles of language; the social system and sub-groups in relation to these codes; variations of social codes and theIR sociolinguistic effects. In doing so, students better understand worldwide societies through language, and even more so, how language shapes societies.
