Course Description

This course provides an introduction to mental health and clinical psychology. Students learn the theories, techniques, and applications of clinical psychology. Additionally, through case studies, students learn how to conduct clinical evaluations according to scientific standards, and develop intervention plans, in order to quickly improve the client's core problems. The course focuses on the teaching and practice of four major areas of clinical psychology: clinical psychological assessment, clinical psychological intervention, social services and regional assistance, and clinical psychological research. Research in clinical psychology is a required part of the course.
