Course Description
This course engages in the comparison of regionalism and regional governance in Europe and Latin America. In the beginning, it discusses some fundamental questions: What are regions, regionalism, and regional governance? What does regionalism in Latin America and Europe look like? It then turns to the drivers of regionalism, institutional structures of regional organizations, and internal effects of regionalism. With these general impressions in mind, regional cooperation and integration in selected policy fields is analyzed. Finally, the last sessions are used to discuss the relations between European and Latin American regional organizations.
