Course Description
This course provides an understanding of the legal framework that governs international business transactions. This course explains how the legal framework restricts parties' freedom to contract in an international context. The course gives the tools to properly appreciate how far the drafting of an international contract may go, as well as to evaluate whether a claim based on an international contract is likely to be enforceable according to its terms or not. The course discusses topics including international conventions, national law, commercial practices, and other forms of “soft law;” how far parties may derogate from the rules in their contracts; mechanisms of choice of forum and choice of law, permitting to identify the law applicable to the contract; and the effectiveness of the rules in case the parties choose to submit any dispute regarding their transaction to international arbitration. Students are expected to take active part in the course, since a part of the course will be dedicated to case studies. This course is designed for students at the master degree level at the University of Oslo, however, the achievement requirements are adjusted for students who take the subject at bachelor degree level.
