Course Description

This course examines the liberal and critical theories of political economy. It focuses on the roles and institutions of government and markets, how these have been defined traditionally, and how they have been changing over time. Select current issues and debates are examined to illustrate the complex interdependencies of government, markets, and business in modern liberal democracies, such as that of Australia. Topics include globalization, neo-liberalism, economic regulation and deregulation, international trade, and governance of financial crises.
