Course Description
The provides an introductory overview of public health issues from both legal and policy perspectives. The interdisciplinary approach offers students a foundational understanding on the intersectionality involved in public health by investigating the power and motivation behind the governance of healthcare through legislative action and judicial decisions. The course begins with an introduction to the key institutions and players that manage and regulate public health. The course then transitions to understanding the types of texts that offer authority in healthcare. Students are asked to explore a variety of policy papers, legislative drafts, information notes as well as relevant case law (in several jurisdictions) that together govern the behavior and outcomes of both scientific and healthcare communities, policy and lawmakers, and undoubtedly the everyday human. The course provides students starter tools in policy analysis and engagement with legal texts. Students are expected to have completed all assigned readings to ensure fruitful discussion an interactive experience participating in the in-class activities.
