Course Description
The course explores the political, economic, social, and culture history of South Asia in this turbulent decade through a mix of contemporary and recent texts, and visual media such as film. The course explores how the political systems which ruled South Asia since the second world war and independence from the British empire weakened and in many places collapsed. The course traces the emergence of a more impatient, populist political and cultural style in the 1970s, which powerfully influenced the politics and culture of South Asia today. While the course focuses on events occurring in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka, it also connects and compares with processes occurring on a global scale, assuming South Asian history can only be understood in relation to other regions.
