Course Description

The Roman empire was one of the longest-lasting in global history. Its enduring impact can be seen, heard and felt today, from language and architecture to film and video. This course examines Rome's rise and fall, and asks how it successfully ruled over so many peoples for so long, in comparison with other world empires. It considers who made up empire emperors, 'barbarians', slaves and ordinary people. It also uncovers the background to early Christianity, Roman legacies inherited through European colonialism, and the numerous references to Rome in both high and popular culture today.
