Course Description

The course teaches major western leadership theories, but also explores, through the real practices of Asian business leaders, the characteristics and behaviors that are not always covered by Western leadership theories. The theories can be divided into three types: the leader as an individual (e.g., personality traits, values, perceptions, attitudes, EQ., etc.);  the leader's behavior (e.g., participative, delegating, empowering, transformational/transactional, authentic, servant and value-based), and the situation that affects leadership (e.g. Contingency theory; cross-cultural leadership theory). In Asia, paternalistic leadership has been relatively well known, however, Asian countries have been the most rapidly developing in the world. This course introduces new leadership practices as well as traditional classic practices, including Confucianism, Buddhism, and Daoism, which are believed to influence many of the Eastern Asian countries, including Japan, Korea, and China.
