Course Description

In this course, students use basic video and communication tools to make their own three to five minute film related to the independent research project (BIO 188: Research Practicum). Through lectures and hands-on exercise, this course offers a study of story-telling, story boards, sound-recording, filming, copyrights, and editing. Students work closely with the film instructor and the advisor of their research project to produce their films. Final films are shown publicly during the homestay family lunch or symposium.
