Course Description

This course charts terrorism’s shifting signature by examining its impact upon London’s modernization. Students discover a city that has been subjected to rapid technological change and new political ideas, that are both wholly alien and eerily familiar. They encounter London as a symbolic target for post-colonial violence and a fulcrum through which terrorist action and state policy are aligned. Approaching the subject through a variety of disciplinary perspectives, students are exposed to a diversity of cultural texts (from novels to films, photographs to monuments) as well as a range of London archives that will contextualize each terrorist incident. These external resources prove invaluable for the final assessment, where students produce a digital e-portfolio exploring three of the terrorist events examined in the module.
