Course Description

This seminar provides students with an introduction to the study of contemporary Chinese political economy. The early sessions of the course will place China's economic development in global historical context before examining the characteristics of the Maoist command economy as well as reformers' approach to marketization after 1978. Later sessions will focus on current issues relating to the state's efforts to establish a sustainable, equitable and innovative economy. The final sessions examine China's role in an increasingly turbulent global economy. Working closely with the instructor, students will write a research paper on a topic related to the contemporary Chinese political economy.
