Course Description

This course is part of the Laurea Magistrale program. The course is intended for advanced level students only. Enrollment is by consent of the instructor. This course provides a general understanding of the use of archaeological methods and data in the context of the study of the Roman economy and critically assesses relevant archaeological evidence. The underlying questions in this module are: what was the nature of the Roman economy? What has archaeology contributed to our picture of the Roman economy? The module is organized thematically and largely focuses on the Roman imperial era, with comparisons to earlier and/or later periods as appropriate. Topics covered include transmarine trade, different types of production activities, and technological innovation. The course discusses topics including agricultural processing facilities; evidence for the production and trade in wine and olive oil; the exploration of marine resources; the use of water power in production processes; and technological innovation.
