Course Description

The course explores how humanity’s political, cultural, social, environmental, and economic issues transcend the way the world is divided through borders and how relations are interconnected across space and time. Students examine various aspects of globalization and key global issues emerging out of interconnectedness and interdependency across borders. Topics include contemporary and historic case-studies, broader trends, and through learning and applying theoretical-frameworks to better understand and analyze how international interdependence emerges, changes, and is governed.
