Course Description
This course examines the discipline of counseling and provides a foundation in fundamental counseling skills. The class encourages self-exploration and personal development, along with exploring the lifespan developmental issues that are most often addressed in counseling psychology. This course also builds upon a general understanding of counseling as a activity that involves primarily providing a listening ear, to the understanding and focused view of counseling as a process underpinned by the prime psychological theories that have helped to shape psychologists' understanding of problems that individuals seek counseling for.
