Course Description

This course introduces both qualitative and quantitative research methods in sociological research. It covers the basics, such as the purpose and significance of social research; the history of social research; research ethics, and how to review sociological literature. Students will also learn about research design, research planning, constructing hypotheses, making questionnaires, sampling, and conducting fieldwork. In the second half of the course, students will write a research proposal, conduct social research, and summarize their findings in a report. By learning the basics of qualitative and quantitative social research methods in this course, students will be able to choose research topics that align with their academic interests and conduct empirical research.
