Course Description

This course surveys intergroup conflict and peacebuilding through the perspective of culture, psychology, and law. The course studies several case studies to understand why people fight; how they form political coalitions to make peace, and the legal frameworks that facilitate a sustained end to conflict. The course is organized around key sociological definitions of groups: political engagement, gender, ethnicity, disability, and nationality. To this end the course looks at historical and present-day examples such as:

- The American Abolitionist Movement
- Eugenics in the Early Twentieth Century
- Nationalism and Gender in World War II
- Human Rights
- Disability Culture in Japan and the United States
- Homophobia in Uganda
- Nativism in Northern Ireland
- Ethnicity and Religion in the Israeli-Palestinian movement
- Peacemaking in Liberia
