Course Description
This course introduces microeconomics, including the theory of consumers, prices, and markets. It explores a range of topics and applications concerning how individuals make decisions about what to consume, produce, buy and sell, and how they interact with other consumers, producers, buyers, and sellers in the marketplace. The course also addresses the role of the government in the system, and policy areas such as regulation, antitrust, taxation, poverty, and welfare. Text: Tyler Cowen and Alex Tabarrok, MODERN PRINCIPLES: MICROECONOMICS. Assessment: assignments (15%), participation (10%), midterm exam (25%), final exam (50%).
