Course Description

This course examines the spread of capitalism across the world in the late 19th – early 20th century, and the variety of responses to this phenomenon. Topics to be covered include the golden age of globalization in the early years of the century, the gold standard, the economic crises of 1914-1945, the divisions of the Cold War world, and the rise of the Bretton Woods system, and, ultimately, the turn toward global integration at the end of the twentieth century. The students will trace the patterns of change in the international markets, investments, and global trade and try to highlight the changes brought about by social movements, political ideologies, and shifts in the economic balance of power.
