Course Description
This course examines human individuality and relatedness, the core themes of personality and social psychology. Students explore the unique nature of individuals, as well as human relationships. The personality component of this course investigates the nature and structure of individual differences, how to assess these differences, and how they are explained psychologically and biologically. The social psychology section examines how individuals construct a sense of self and identity, how they perceive and evaluate other people, how they form relationships, and how their behavior is influenced by their social groups and cultural context. A quantitative methods component is included to provide an understanding of, and practical experience with, the appropriate experimental design and statistical analysis techniques used to evaluate theories in personality and social psychology.
