Course Description
This course introduces the linkages between modern Europe, its historical foundations, and its various national identities. Issues of identity include history, politics, society, languages, religion, and culture (art, literature, music, film, etc.) from the ancient to contemporary periods. Each week the course concentrates on one country and asks what the major characteristics of national identity are; what Europeans have in common and what divides them; what the key moments are in the formation of modern European states; and what the major national trends are. Assessment: oral presentation and seminar participation (20%), research paper (30%), exam (50%).
