Course Description
This course examines cultural anthropology in today's world. The course begins by looking at how cultural and social anthropologists approach anthropology, focusing on ethnography and theory. The course then considers the pathways of human cultural evolution; the relation of culture to economics, language, family and gender, power and politics, and religion; and culture, ethnicity, and nation in terms of globalization and what it means. Finally, the course discusses the future of anthropology as a discipline. Assessment: midterm exam (50%), final exam (50%).
