Course Description

What are the trends in both globalization and development? How is our understanding of both globalization and development changing in light of the recent global economic crisis and ongoing systemic weaknesses? Students investigate the trends that are going to shape the world in the coming decades: increased interconnectedness, crises in existing economic, political, and social institutions within nations and internationally; increasing pressure on natural resources; huge demographic shifts; and a shifting in the economic and geo-political balance of power, specifically the rise of China and India, with a secondary look at Brazil. The focus of this semester is on the economic sociology of globalization and development. The second semester focuses on culture and globalization and development.
