Course Description
Operations management relates to transformations of materials, people and information for the production of goods and the delivery of services. The working of an operation has always been an enigma. On the one hand, the operation is a visible part of the organization where people or equipment can be seen to be working away and where something happens. On the other hand, the operation will neither come right nor stay right of its own accord and, even if challenged, answers to the following questions are not obvious: What makes it work as it does? Could it work better in its current form? What different forms could it take and still get the same result? What market, internal or environmental change would cause most disruption to the working of the operation, and with what knock-on effects? This course introduces Operations Management as the act of combining people and technology in an organization so as to produce goods and to deliver services now and in the future.
