Course Description
This course develops students' understanding of the relationship between literature and society in the 18th century. The texts included are drawn from different periods in the 18th century and from a variety of genres, which may include the novel and poetry. Special attention is given to the rise of the novel form, to changes in poetic and literary models, and subsequent changes in notions of literature, authorship, and literary meaning. The course also focuses on questions of class, gender, ideology, and nation in relation to literary texts.
