Course Description

In this course, students explore children and young people's development from an interdisciplinary perspective. The course takes a holistic and ecological view of developmental trajectories in the context of social relationships. It provides an overview of children and young people's bio-psycho-social, cultural, and emotional development. Students examine the role that relationships with primary carers, significant others, family members, and friends play in that development. Students reflect on key concepts in child and youth development, such as attachment, transition, identity, risk, and resilience.
