Course Description

The course is divided into two parts: (1) International trade and (2) International macroeconomics. In the first part, the course introduces a number of models that help us understand the reasons why countries trade goods and services. Empirical evidence is provided to highlight the strengths and limitations of the introduced theories. In the second part, the course explores topics linked to the global macroeconomy. It presents a framework to analyze how the interdependence among countries shapes their economy-wide variables and draws links between theory and real world events.
