Course Description

This course introduces to students the neglected field of avant-garde film making through a study of its development in Europe during the 1920s and '30s and its specific relationship to the thought and practice of the modernist avant-garde in other media, especially art and literature. The emphasis is on filmmaking as a personal practice, and its relation to developments in fine art and literary practices within western culture. Content varies depending upon emerging developments in the field.
