Course Description
This course offers a study of the effects of Western colonial presence and imperialism on societies of Southeast Asia. The course explores topics including the workings of the colonial presence, the dynamics of conquest and rule by western powers and the local reactions, the impact of colonial rule on the societies and world views in Asia, and issues of modernization and religion. The course utilizes case studies from Southeast Asia, with a focus on Indonesia. The course features a strong research component, which requires students to do research in primary source material and write an extensive academic paper. The course consists of lectures, seminar discussions, readings, assignments, and group work.
