Course Description

This course covers various approaches to the design, implementation, and evaluation of policies and programs to address global health problems. By learning from previous successes and failures in global health, the course explores evidence-based strategies, policies, and programmatic interventions to improve the following outcomes: child undernutrition; maternal mortality; malaria; tuberculosis; HIV/AIDS; alcohol use and tobacco control; chronic diseases; mental health; air pollution and climate change; and the 21st century epidemics. Through these case studies, the course will challenge and encourage students to brainstorm various ways to improve the effectiveness and sustainability of global health projects. Sessions in this course will be comprised of interactive lectures and case-based learning. The course requires active participation from all students.
