Course Description

This course provides a solid understanding of classic and contemporary psychological theory and research in Social Psychology which covers key research in social thinking, influence, and inter-group behavior. Students learn to describe and evaluate major models and theories within social psychology; critically analyze the role of culture in social behavior with a focus on the difference between collectivist and individualistic cultures; explain the main theories of social facilitation and social loafing; analyze key issues in the study of group behavior such as communication, status, roles, and leadership; evaluate the empirical evidence of theories and intergroup conflict comparing realistic conflict theory with that of social categorization theory; critically analyze evidence where social psychology has helped solve an applied problem such as leadership education or prejudice; and to apply their knowledge to real-world situations.
