Course Description

This course engages real-world cases of resource competition such as conflicts around land, water, green grabbing, mining, or infrastructure development. It analyses the dynamics of contention in these cases, identifying patterns of power and exclusion, and designing pathways for constructive engagement. Cases are developed together with governmental and non-governmental organizations, who are also involved in assessing the proposed pathways. It is strongly recommended (but not obligatory) that students take the course “Resource competition worldwide: Issues and perspectives” (SDC52806) given in Period 1.
