Course Description

This course introduces the study of martial arts in Southeast Asia from an academic and experiential perspective. Students analyze journal articles, books, and materials from social media to understand how various social, political, economic, and historical forces impacted on the production and performance of martial arts in the region. The course is complemented with hands-on sessions that further the understanding of complex historical, sociological, and cultural dimensions of various combat genres. Student assignments such as essays and group video projects reveal new ways in how Southeast Asia can be understood from multi-disciplinary perspectives.
