Course Description

In this project-based workshop course, the background and effects of topics related to environmental justice such as environmental racism, gender issues, disadvantage due to physical impairments and social differences in the city are examined. The discussion-based debate during the event is to be expanded by a media project in which a selected topic is creatively addressed.

You will not only learn about content expertise, but also different methods and the use of different media. This includes:

• Expertise in the meaning of environmental justice and the background and consequences of the prevailing discrepancies
• Expertise in the ecological foundations and ecosystem services in the city
• Different perspectives from different disciplines by working on topic-specific literature
• An ability to reflect on urban infrastructure through a combination of ecological and social expertise regarding environmental justice
• Discussion skills as well as presentation and moderation skills in interdisciplinary exchanges with other participants from different study programs
• Creative process of developing and implementing a media project from finding a topic to presenting the final result
• Scientific and fact-based development of a creative media project and formulation of socio-political demands and solution approaches in a project report
• Be able to apply learned specialist knowledge and critical considerations regarding environmental justice not only to urban areas, but also to transfer them to everyday living environments
