Course Description

Hangul is the name of the alphabet used to write the Korean language. This course begins by learning the letters and pronunciation of modern Korean, as well as grammar points such as polite expressions that correspond to "desu, masu" in Japanese; designates that are roughly equivalent to the English be verb; existential verbs that express presence or absence of objects; interjections; proper number words; negative expressions, and past tense.

No prior knowledge is required to take the course, but students are recommended to study the letters and pronunciation thoroughly, especially during the first month.

By the end of this course, students are expected to write a simple diary during summer vacation.
