Course Description

This course consists of three parts. First, it studies the economics of financial markets, with a particular emphasis on interest rates. The second part concerns financial institutions, necessary players for the proper functioning of financial markets. Important topics in this part are (a) asymmetric information problems in financial markets; (b) risk management in banking, and (c) financial crises. The third and last part covers central banks and monetary policy. Understanding monetary policy is important, given its substantial influence on financial markets and overall economic activities.
