Course Description

This course introduces analytical tools and recent topics in industrial organization related to the digital economy.

It provides students with theoretical tools for equilibrium analysis of oligopolistic competition, both useful for research in both empirical and theoretical industrial organization. These tools include discrete choice models, basic contract theory, and some theories of particular games such as aggregative games and supermodular games. Additionally, it provides students with theoretical frameworks to analyze recent market phenomena in the digital economy such as platform's business strategies and competition in online markets.
