Course Description

This course introduces the theories and techniques of journalism, with an emphasis on fairness and accuracy of journalistic coverage of diverse, multi-ethnic communities, the role of journalism in democratic societies, news values and ethics, and reporting and writing techniques. Using specific examples from two geographical and political arenas, students examine the influence of journalism on politics, business, and society. Topics include the role of foreign correspondents in the location of their study. Much of the coursework includes practical reporting and students develop a journalism portfolio based on weekly exercises.
