Course Description

This course explores the concept and process of design thinking. Students will gain awareness of their own process, develop research skills and methods necessary for any design project, both in academia and in the commercial world, and examine methods for projecting plausible futures based on current trends.

The course introduces the history and development of thoughts on design as a discipline and important concepts that have significantly contributed to design research and studies. Students will encounter curated design thoughts and assignments to help develop their own perspectives on design and produce useful/usable work pieces for their career.
