Course Description

The course proposes a tour - not strictly chronological - through the Spanish American essay from the 19th century to the present. The main ideas, paradigms, sensitivities and tensions that articulate regional thought will be presented, such as those of civilization and barbarism, the local and the foreign, center and periphery, tradition and modernity, among others. In the same way, key thematic axes of contemporary essay production will be addressed, such as the monstrous, animality and gender as they provide notions that inform a discourse of the Hispanic American intellectual subject in relation to the local and global present.
