Course Description

The conflict in and about Northern Ireland and the long peace process present a range of ongoing challenges for politics and society. This course examines a range of thematic challenges with respect to conflict, peacemaking, and peacebuilding and democratic governance in Northern Ireland. It looks as the roots of "The Troubles," the nature of the violence, the emergence of a peace process, and how this process has developed over the last thirty years. It speaks to questions such as What caused the conflict in Northern Ireland?, Why did the peace process happen?, Does power sharing work?, and How can we address the legacy of the conflict?
