Course Description

The rise of cities in the British Isles since the modern era has fostered the development of a collective culture linked to spatial markers, material objects and forms of expression. Forged in a history of conflict, this culture is defined through rituals, works of art, monuments, oral, printed, and audiovisual narratives. This course explores the specificity and diversity of cultural forms and practices whose context, breeding ground, object, and methods of expression are urban spaces and urban life. It approaches the articulation between cities and cultures through the prism of the social, political, and cultural history of the United Kingdom in the 20th century through cultural productions and practices such as cinema, visual arts, literature, music, and leisure. It introduces the approaches of cultural history, sociological analysis, and the history of forms. The course is structured around key topics, including identities, conflicts, expression, democracy, protest, spaces, time, class, art, memory, representation, history, rituals, tourism, hauntology, and psychogeography.
