Course Description
This course explores the social, cultural and political processes that define the current relationship between Chilean society and its indigenous communities including the Mapuche, the Rapa Nui, and the Aymara. It investigates the historical process that created the often problematic and challenging relationship between Chilean society with the indigenous peoples and provides a critical analysis of multicultural reality in Chile today. Other themes covered include: theoretical approaches to ethnicity; migration processes and rural and urban habitats of Chilean indigenous peoples; Chilean public policies; indigenous movements and challenges of recognition.
