Course Description

In this course, students gain a broad understanding of the roots and character of the international trade in illicit drugs, and the difficulties in restricting its strength and influence. The course goes over the origins and history of the global drugs trade, relationships between the international drugs trade, globalization, and capitalism. Students learn about the spatial distribution and general economics of the drugs trade globally and the social harm to populations of this trade. They gain knowledge on the efforts to regulate, control, and eradicate the international trade, and evaluation of those efforts.
