Course Description

The class first covers the historical-social process of capitalism through a geographic perspective by explaining the different theories of political economy and its critics, mainly Marx. The course begins with the physiocrats, then to the mercantiles, and classical political economic theories. The course covers feudal societies, class antagonisms, creation of port cities, and centralization of markets and power within cities. It also addresses the hierarchical dynamics of capitalism on a global scale and changes in use value and exchange value as a result of higher quality of life.
