Course Description

This course introduces students to theories of foreign policy that explain U.S. behavior, ranging from military conflict to secret diplomacy. The course is organized into three sections. The first part gives an overview of American grand strategy and values. The second section follows an actor-specific approach, focusing on how crucial actors such as the President and Congress shape American foreign policy. Last, the issue-oriented section will be concluded with a wargaming exercise. Following the lectures on these topics, the instructor will design group exercises and offer materials for course discussion, including detailed case studies of important episodes in U.S. diplomatic and military history.
