Course Description

This course discusses the functioning of both the EU and the UN as normative power intergovernmental organizations. Do they really deserve to be labelled as such? And if so, what extent have they been successful as keepers of international peace? The EU's Commission and Council and the UN's Security Council, General Assembly and Human Rights at the hand of both historical and actual cases are assessed. Do not expect a clear "yes" or "no", but come to learn what the limits and opportunities of the EU and the UN as prominent IGO's in the field of international politics are and even more important: come to learn how to start your own research on both normative powers by using both secondary and primary sources, including the necessary theoretical toolkit on how to interpret them.
