Course Description

This is a higher level course (CEFR B2 - C1) for international students. The course is based on different types of non-fiction texts, fiction texts, radio and TV programs, and other types of written and oral presentations. Students learn to give oral presentations and to use language flexibly and appropriately for both social and academic purposes. Students are expected to contribute actively to discussions and debates, for example, by asking questions, justifying and arguing for their own opinions. Students are also expected to give feedback to each other. The learning objectives for written production in the curriculum Norwegian for immigrants - level C1 form the basis of the teaching, and the course is therefore useful for students who wish to take the Norwegian language test at level C1. This is a proficiency course with a final examination.
