Course Description

This course aims to develop an in-depth understanding of what public policy is and why government involvement in solving collective problems is accepted. The course reviews definitions and practical examples of public policy and of the policy process (agenda setting, formulation, implementation, and evaluation), making use of several examples from China, East Asia, and Europe.

This course is divided into two parts. The first part consists of lectures, discussions, and a policy data workshop to gain theoretical and data knowledge on public policies. The second part of the course is more interactive and consists of lectures, students' presentations, a field trip, and a video projection. This part focuses on specific policies at the center of current public debates, such as economy, labor market and migration, environment, education, health care, housing, and welfare.
