Course Description

This course explores public and personal health infrastructure with a focus on Egypt. It includes an optional service-learning component in which students become aware of their role in community health issues. The course discusses the effect of cultural and social-economic conditions on public health, community and governmental services to protect and improve the health of populations, and methods of transmission and prevention of selected diseases. It considers current and emerging health concerns in the region and worldwide, preventive measures for current and emerging health concerns, and how health issues impact society. It also practices efficiently writing and presenting health issues to the public.
